How Do I Choose A Counsellor?

It is easy to be confused by the various titles and jargon associated with counselling services. Below are brief explanations, in very general terms, of what some of these names mean to help you decide which service is best for you. Remember, you are perfectly entitled to ask a counsellor for further information on their Qualifications, techniques and areas of specialisation. The most important thing is that you experience a good connection with the counsellor, whatever their training or title.

PSYCHOLOGISTS have usually gone through several years of undergraduate and post graduate training in human behaviour. They use a range of psychological interventions to treat less severe mental illnesses and psychological distress. They sometimes are confused with psychiatrists who are actually medically trained and usually work with more severe mental illnesses and prescribe medication. In Australia, qualified psychologists are usually members of the Australian Psychological Society and hence use the acronym MAPS.

SOCIAL WORKERS have a broad training, including practice in a variety of counselling techniques. They tend to focus on a client's total situation, such as their living environment, in addressing problems or crises. They will often offer family therapy. In Australia, qualified social workers usually hold a Bachelor of Social Work (BSW) and are members of the Australian Association of Social Workers (AASW).

COUNSELLORS who are not psychologists or social workers usually have formal training also. The training may be university degrees (e.g. in human behaviour and counselling), in general counselling (e.g. Diploma of Professional Counselling), or more specific fields (e.g. Gestalt Therapy; Expressive Therapies). Many counsellors in the Wimmera region have completed a Diploma of Welfare Studies and are therefore also known as WELFARE WORKERS. Most counsellors are members of a professional organisation such as the Australian Institute of Welfare and Community Workers (AIWCW) or Australian Counselling Association (ACA).

Some counsellors may call themselves PSYCHOTHERAPISTS. Counselling and psychotherapy both refer to psychological therapy, although psychotherapy is likely to be more in-depth than some forms of counselling.
